BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

HON. JOHN McKOWNE, PRESIDENT.
HON. JNO. F. TORRENCE,
JOSEPH SEIFERT, ESQ.,
HON. HENRY KESSLER,
HON. JNO. K. GREEN,
HON. JOSHUA H. BATES, SECRETARY.

OFFICERS.

SUPERINTENDENT AND PHYSICIAN,
O. M. LANGDON, M.D.

ASSISTANT PHYSICIAN,
A. P. COURTRIGHT, M.D.

STEWARD,
R. T. THORBURN, ESQ.

MATRON,
MRS. LOUISA W. JONES.

This edifice, which is built of brick, is six hundred and twelve feet long, and consists of a centre building, five stories high, surmounted by a dome and two wings, three stories high, each intersected by three cross-buildings, two of which are four stories high, one of them surmounted by a dome, smaller, however, than the one on the main building. The front of the centre is but three stories high, and somewhat narrower than the rest of the building. In front of this is a brick portico, also three stories high. The portico is reached by a flight of four steps, and from this three more steps lead up to the main entrance. From the entrance a hall ten feet wide runs back to the rotunda, which is in the centre of the building, and is forty-four feet in diameter and eighty-eight feet high, with five corridors around it, communicating with the different stories; the floor, as well as the dome, is of glass, for the purpose of giving light to the basement. On one side of the hall is the office, apothecaries', and reception-room for visitors to female patients; on the other side are two public reception-rooms and a reception-room for visitors to male patients. At the sides of the rotunda are the entrances to the main stairways. Directly in the rear of the rotunda is a hall running back to a stairway, which ascends to the third story, and descends to the basement. On one side of this hall is the dining-room for the first ward, double bed-room water closet, bath and lumber-rooms; on the other side, ward dining-room, steward's office, and bed-room. In the second story, passing from front to rear, there is on one side of the front hall the trustees' room, perlor, and room for the assistant physician; on the other side, sitting and dining-rooms, then the first corridor around the rotunda, with entrances to the stairways on each side; then a hall running back as in the first floor, and on either side of this hall store-rooms and matron's room and ward dining-rooms. In the third story there are on one side of the front hall reading, library, and bed-rooms; on the other side the Superintendent's rooms, then the corridor around the rotunda, with entrances to main stairways, and on each side of the rear hall three bed-rooms and ward dining-room.

The number, size, and arrangement of the rooms in these three stories are precisely the same, with the exception of the space devoted to water-closet and bath-room, on the first floor, being devoted to a bed-room in the floors above.

The fourth story is devoted to wards for patients, dining-rooms, water-closets, &c., except the space immediately in the rear of the rotunda, which is occupied by the chapel, a room sixty-three feet by thirty feet, and twenty-eight feet high, and which is reached by an iron stairway on either side, for the use of the patients, as well as by the main stairways.

In the fifth story are the servants' sleeping rooms, and four large iron tanks, which contain the supply of water for the house. In the basement are the washing, drying, ironing, bake, and four rooms, kitchens and general store-rooms; in that portion of the basement under the wings are the workshops, clothing-rooms, elevators, chambers for heating air to warm the wards, bed-room, dust holes, drop for soiled clothes, bowling alleys, &c. Underneath the basement are the cellars, air duct for ventilation, coal pits, boiler-room, and gas-house. The basement and cellar are continued back in the rear of the main building about one hundred and seventy feet, forming a low building of that length, and as the ground gradually recedes in that direction, the boiler-room which is at the extremity of this building is almost entirely above ground. This arrangement removes from the immediate neighborhood of the main building all those processes which would be liable to cause discomfort by heat, smell, &c., and also allows the smoke stack, which is also the ventilating flue for the whole house, to be at such a distance as to insure the delivery of the impure air so far from the house that there cannot be the slightest danger of its being returned to it, no matter what the direction of the wind may be.

Four boilers have been put in, 50 inches diameter, 26 feet long, with six flues in each, two of 10½ inches diameter, and four of 8½. They are all made of the best Hillman iron, the shell ⅝ iron. The flues of the same iron, ¼ inch thick. The boilers are set in two batteries, two in each with steam-drum 24 inches in diameter, and mud-drum 20 inches in diameter. The supply-stands, at the upper end of each boiler, are 9 inches in diameter. The steam and mud-drums are made of ⅝ iron, the supply-stands of ½ inch. The drums and stands are all riveted on.

The wards for inmates who are not pay patients are all located in the wings, and the two wings are precisely alike, and the different stories also are on the same plan, so that a description of one floor of one wing, will answer for all the rest.

This edifice, which is built of brick, is six hundred and twelve feet long, and consists of a centre building, five stories high, surmounted by a dome and two wings, three stories high, each intersected by three cross-buildings, two of which are four stories high, one of them surmounted by a dome, smaller, however, than the one on the main building. The front of the centre is but three stories high, and somewhat narrower than the rest of the building. In front of this is a brick portico, also three stories high. The portico is reached by a flight of four steps, and from it three more steps lead up to the main entrance. From the entrance a hall ten feet wide runs back to the rotunda, which is in the centre of the building, and is forty-four feet in diameter and eighty-eight feet high, with five corridors around it, communicating with the different stories; the floor, as well as the dome, is of glass, for the purpose of giving light to the basement. On one side of the hall is the office, apothecaries', and reception-room for visitors to female patients; on the other side are two public reception-rooms and a reception-room for visitors to male patients. At the sides of the rotunda are the entrances to the main stairways. Directly to the rear of the rotunda is a hall running back to a stairway, which ascends to the third story, and descends to the basement. On one side of this hall is the dining-room for the first ward, double bed-room, water closet, bath and lumber-rooms; on the other side, ward dining-room, steward's office, and bed-room. In the second story, passing from front to rear, there is on one side of the front hall the trustees' room, parlor, and room for the assistant physician; on the other side, sitting and dining-rooms, then the first corridor around the rotunda, with entrances to the stairways on each side; then a hall running back as in the first floor, and on either side of this hall store-rooms and matron's room and ward dining-rooms. In the third story there are on one side of the front hall reading, library, and bed-rooms; on the other side the Superintendent's rooms, then the corridor around the rotunda, with entrances to main stairways, and on each side of the rear hall three bed-rooms and ward dining-room.

The number, size, and arrangement of the rooms in these three stories are precisely the same, with the exception of the space devoted to water-closet and bath-room, on the first floor, being devoted to a bed-room in the floors above.

The fourth story is devoted to wards for pay-patients, dining-rooms, water-closets, &c., except the space immediately in the rear of the rotunda, which is occupied by the chapel, a room sixty-three feet by thirty feet, and twenty-eight feet high, and which is reached by an iron stairway on either side, for the use of the patients, as well as by the main stairways.

In the fifth story are the servants' sleeping-rooms, and four large iron tanks, which contain the supply of water for the house. In the basement are the washing, drying, ironing, bake, and other rooms, kitchens and general store-rooms. In that portion of the basement under the wings are the workshops, clothing-rooms, elevators, chambers for heating air to warm the wards, coal-room, dust holes, drop for soiled clothes, rolling alleys, &c. Underneath the basement are the cellars, air duct for ventilation, coal pits, boiler-room, and gas-house. The basement and cellar are continued back to the rear of the main building about one hundred and seventy feet, forming a low building of that length, and as the ground gradually recedes in that direction, the boiler-room which is at the extremity of this building is almost entirely above ground. This arrangement removes from the immediate neighborhood of the main building all those processes which would be liable to cause discomfort by heat, smell, &c., and also allows the smoke stack, which is also the ventilating flue for the whole house, to be at such a distance as to insure the delivery of the impure air so far from the house that there cannot be the slightest danger of its being returned to it, no matter what the direction of the wind may be.

Four boilers have been put in, 50 inches diameter, 26 feet long, with six flues in each, two of 10½ inches diameter, and four of 8½. They are all made of the best Hillman iron, the shell ⅜ iron. The flues of the same iron, ¼ inch thick. The boilers are set in two batteries, two in each with steam-drum 24 inches in diameter, and mud-drum 30 inches in diameter. The supply-stands, at the upper end of each boiler, are 9 inches in diameter. The steam and mud-drums are made of ⅜ iron, the supply-stands of ¼ inch. The drums and stands are all riveted on.

The wards for inmates who are not pay patients are all located in the wings, and the two wings are precisely alike, and the different stories also are on the same plan, so that a description of one floor of one wing will answer for all the rest.

Leaving the rotunda by the entrance to the main stairway, and passing the foot of the latter a short passage leads to a door opening into a small apartment or lobby, in which is a door opening into an iron stairway extending from the ground to the chapel in the fourth story; from this lobby also a door opens into the main hall of the first ward; the iron stairway also has a door opening directly into the ward. The hall is one hundred and twenty-three feet long, twelve wide, and thirteen feet high. Immediately on entering it, there is on one side, toward the rear of the building, a door opening into the ward dining-room; farther along, on the same side, there are four windows for lighting this end of the hall; on the other side, opposite these windows, is the sitting or day-room of the ward, sixteen feet by thirty-two; then follow, on either side of the hall, the dormitories of which there are fifteen, each eight by twelve feet six inches, and each having a ventilating flue opening out from it. The windows are provided with solid sliding shutters, which can be locked either when entirely closed or when elevated about five inches. Just beyond the small dormitories on the rear side of the hall is a large iron stairway leading from the basement to the fourth story, next to the stairway there is an associate dormitory sixteen feet six inches by thirty feet, and an attendant's room ten feet by eight. Here the hall terminates, and is lighted by three windows at the extreme end. Opposite the associate dormitory is a small hall or passage way at right angles with the main hall, and running toward the front of the building and opening into the main hall of the second ward. About the middle of this small hall are double doors shutting off the first from the second ward. Just before reaching the division a door opens into the space on one side of this hall containing the water-closet and bath-room and wash stand, clothing-room, dry-room, elevator and drop for soiled clothes belonging to the first ward. After passing the double doors, we have a door opening out of the other side of the hall into the space containing the water-closet, bath-room, &c., of the second ward. Passing on into the main hall of the second ward, which is 108 feet long by ten feet wide, having three windows at each extremity for lighting and ventilation, we have just opposite the small hall or entry the water-closets, bath-room, &c.; on either side of it there are two associate dormitories, one ten by twenty-two feet, the other twelve feet six inches by seventeen feet, with an attendant's room nine by sixteen feet; between them, on the sides of the main hall, are twelve dormitories, the same size as in the first ward; then in front, a day-room, twenty-two by twenty-seven feet, or rather two, with folding doors between. Opposite is the dining-room, sixteen feet six inches by thirty feet, with a pantry five feet by seven feet, elevator, &c., also an iron stairway reaching from the basement to the fourth story. Here the ward terminates. A hall or corridor, seven feet wide by forty-four long, continues along the front of the remainder of the wing until it reaches the first or female story cross building, where it turns at right angles, and continues toward the rear about forty-two feet more. Opening out from that portion of this corridor which runs along the front, is an attendant's room, eight feet six inches by eleven feet, a bath-room, six feet by eleven, clothes-room, five by eleven feet, two water-closets, four by four feet, drying-room, four feet six inches by eight feet, and drop for soiled clothes, wash-stand, and entrance to another iron stairway, four feet wide, running from the ground to the third story. In that portion of the hall which passes back toward the rear are the entrances to five strong rooms, intended for very violent patients.

The cross-buildings of the wings are all, except the two at the extreme ends in which the strong rooms are located, one story higher than the rest of the wings, and the two next the main building are surmounted by domes. The upper stories of these are devoted principally to convalescents, and contain the amusement and reading-rooms. We have chess, dominoes, draughts, backgammon, quoits, ball, bowling alleys, billiard and bagatelle tables, &c. &c. Many of the inmates have some proficiency in music, and there are various instruments in the house which are used by them.

One of the first necessities of an establishment of this kind is an abundant supply of water, and this has been provided for by the location of a small steam pump on the bank of the canal, which forces the water up into a reservoir on a level with the basement and another pump, or rather pair, for there are two of them in the rear of the basement, which forces it up into the tanks in the fifth story of the main building. In the pipe which leads to the tanks there is a stopcock and opening to which hose can be attached, so that in case of fire the whole force of the engine, which is thirty horse-power, can be employed to throw water directly upon the flames. This engine, besides working the pumps, furnishes power for operating a large washing machine, wringer, and mangle. The boilers supply steam not only for the engine, but for heating water, cooking, and warming the house. The house is warmed partly by radiators located in different apartments, and partly from air heated by passing over coils of steam pipe, the hall of each ward having registers conveying hot air. The sitting-rooms most remote from the main building each contain an independent coil of steam pipe.

The building is lighted by gas manufactured on the premises, the works being in the rear of the main building, and at one side of the boiler and pump-room. The gasometer is thirty-three feet in diameter and twelve feet high, and has a capacity of about twelve thousand cubic feet.

Ventilation is insured by means of a large air duct located in the cellar and traversing the whole length of the house, and terminating in the chimney stack, which is thirteen feet in diameter, one hundred and twenty-five feet high, octagonal in shape, having the flue from the boilers running up the centre, and the flues from the kitchens, wash-house, and gas-works in the angles. These flues heat the air around them sufficiently to cause a strong upward current in the chimney stack, and consequently an efficient draught in the air duct and ventilation flues. The height of the stack and its distance from the house insure the delivery of the foul air at a distance sufficient to prevent its return.

Drainage is effected by means of an eight-inch pipe in the bottom of the air-duct, and in which all the sewerage pipes of the house terminate. This pipe terminates at the chimney stack in an egg-shaped sewer two feet by sixteen inches, which extends eight hundred feet in the rear of the building.

To give some idea of the size and capacity of the building and the extent to which it is supplied with gas and water, I will state that there are in the house nearly six hundred rooms, fifty-six water-closets, six thousand one hundred and seventy-eight feet of water pipe, three hundred and fifty-six cocks, and five hundred gas-burners.

Between six and seven millions of bricks were used in erecting the building, and its entire cost was four hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The wood cut represents a handsome and convenient edifice which stands on the Carthage Pike, about forty rods west and opposite the main building, and is used for the accommodation of colored patients.
